

Brian Seeger

General Manager, Special Accounts
Rudolph Libbe Inc.

For Brian, construction is in his blood. He was brought up to have a deep appreciation and understanding of the business from his father and grandfather who both worked in the industry their entire adult lives. After graduation from the University of Toledo, Brian spent five years as a high school teacher and football coach. As a former athlete, he gravitated toward the competitive nature and relationship building of sports. Being able to combine his love of competition as well as his teamwork skills to succeed in business ultimately led him to change his career path from education to the construction industry.

In 1986, Brian joined Rudolph Libbe Inc. as a carpenter apprentice in the training program. His ongoing commitment to dig deep and sharpen his skills alongside RLI's expert craftsmen helped him gain valuable experience. Over the last 30 years at the company, he's served as carpenter apprentice, assistant superintendent, estimator, project engineer, assistant project manager, project manager and general manager.

Brian is continuously motivated by the growth and success of his team. He takes pride in maintaining a healthy, safe and responsive work atmosphere focused on providing positive impact and solutions for customers.

Today, Brian retains this passion as general manager of Special Accounts which is responsible for managing small construction and maintenance projects for long-term customers and new ones as well. His expertise includes customer relations, labor relations, business planning and project execution. He is regarded as a trusted advisor and a steward of his customer's investments.

Brian is based in Toledo and a member of the Association of General Contractors. He also serves as a Trustee on Bricklayers Pension Fund, Northwest Ohio Administrators and the Union Construction Workers Health Plan.
